

Information for Client Looking for a Career in Human Resources Management or Recruitment

OVERVIEW

There are several levels of human resources positions in public and private operations.

- Entry Level

Entry-level positions include Personnel Clerk, HR assistant or HR specialist for which responsibilities and tasks might include assisting with keeping records of employee benefits, work performance and compensation. Entry-level human resource workers may assist in employee orientation, training and development. These positions support personnel officers and human resources departments by compiling, maintaining and processing information relating to staffing, recruitment, training, labour relations, performance evaluations and classifications. While completion of grade 12 is accepted, most employers look for completion of programs or courses in personnel administration at the college level.

- Recruitment specialists

With experience and further education, it is possible to progress to specialist and management positions such as recruiters; managers in recruitment, staffing, personnel, human resources; recruitment specialists or be self-employed as such. Recruitment officers identify and advertise job vacancies, recruit appropriate candidates and assist with the selection and reassignment of employees. They need to be familiar with the business operations of the industry in which they work. Excellent organizational and communication skills (oral and written) are essential. Employers may require the Registered Professional Recruiter (RPR) designation with the Association of Professional Recruiters of BC (APRC).

- Human Resource Managers

More senior positions are Human Resource (HR) managers who ensure employees receive the proper compensation and benefits, oversee workplace safety, direct the maintenance of employee records, and manage overall employee hiring, evaluation and labor relations. They also develop, implement and oversee training programs or procedures. HR managers must stay up-to-date with policies that govern employee rights, such as equal opportunity employment and sexual harassment. Education, work experience and certification (e.g. CHRP) requirements for these positions are more extensive.

While individuals can work their way up in the profession without formal HR education or CHRP designation, those qualifications are preferred by most companies. The amount of business experience, a person has is also a factor, as are numeracy and analytical skills.

HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGER QUALIFICATIONS AND CERTIFICATION

- University degree in field related to personnel management such as human resources, business administration, industrial relations, commerce or psychology
 - some employers require a master's degree
- Certification as a Chartered Professional in Human Resources (CHRP) optional but is usually the minimum required
- Experience in entry-level clerical or administrative position related to personnel administration may be required
- 3 - 5 years progressive experience usually required for more advanced positions
- Extensive skills using computer-based management information systems

HUMAN RESOURCES AND RECRUITMENT OFFICER (RPR DESIGNATION)

The Institute of Professional Management (IPM) offers a 3-module training program which upon successful completion provides for the Registered Professional Recruiter (RPR) designation with the Association of Professional Recruiters of BC (APRC). The IPM is a certified educational body registered with Employment and Social Development Canada (ESDC) and offers nationally recognized accreditation programs.

STEPS TO CHARTERED PROFESSIONAL AND HUMAN RESOURCES (CHRP) CERTIFICATION

Certification is managed by the Chartered Professionals in Human Resources (CPHR) who have developed a competency framework for the profession. The framework defines the required nine functional areas of knowledge in the HR field based on a dual-competency model (both technical and general skills, abilities and knowledge).

All HR professionals seeking the CPHR designation are required to write the association's National Knowledge Exam® (NKE) and demonstrating three years' experience in HR related work. The exam consists of 160 multiple choice questions. It is scheduled in June and November each year through the provincial branch of the national association. Successfully completing the exam = candidate for certification.

The following diagram outlines the possible routes to certification, but with the following caveats:

- Path 4 (Masters) - there are currently no approved agreements in place
- Path 7 (International) - International prospects must have satisfied a certification path approved by CPHR BC & Yukon and be deemed to substantially meet or exceed the conditions of CPHR BC & Yukon certification requirements
